

I once resolv'd that nothing should be seen,
 And so presum'd to interpose a Screen.
 Becaus I thought the Multitude with greed,
 Would love to looke upon the Peece, not read.
 But in the end, determin'd for to take,
 Aside the Curtaine, for the Figur's sake.
 That seeing first, this Hæro's in the face,
 They then might read, but in the second place,
 Englands brave Gen'rall, in its just defence,
 Yet but the Shaddows of his EXCELLENCE.

The Assembly of Divines.

Then marched a commanded Party of fifty or sixty Horse in the Reare of all the Traine. Here endeth the proceeding.

The Church being prepared and ordered by the Heralds for the reception and severall placing of the Lords and Commons, the Judges, the Recorder and Aldermen of the City of London, the Committee of the Militia of the said City, the Assembly of Divines, the Commanders and Captaines under Sir Wil. Vvalter, and all other the Commanders and Mourners. The charge of the Church to have these placed accordingly, and to keepe out the multitude, and all women of any quality whatsoever was by an Order of the Lords Assembled in Parliament, committed to the care and charge of Captaine Thomas Faldonbridge, and Lawrence Sweetenham Esquires, two of his Majesties Justices of Peace in Westminster, who did performe that service with great care and discretion.

As soon as the Sermon was ended, and the three Officers of his Lordships Household had broken their white Staves, and other Ceremonies in the Church performed, and that the Trumpets had sounded, according to custom, at such great Solemnities of Funeralls, Order was immediately given for the great Bell at S. Margarets Church to knoll thrice, which gave a Signall to M. Ward a Gentleman of the Ordnance, who was placed on the highest Tower of the Abbey-Church, with a red Ensigne to advance (if the Solemnity had been fully performed by day) and also a great Globe-Lanthorne, with three great lights in it, to give a Signall to the Lord Mayors-Stone Fort in Southwark, to fire one great piece of Ordnance, which should be the Warning-piece to Faux-Hall Fort: and this being performed accordingly by the Lanthorne at seven a clock at night, and the Warning-piece being fired, it gave notice to Faux-Hall Fort, where all the Pieces fired, and so the Redoubt, Block-Houses, Turtle Fort, and so round about the Line of Communication, ending at the Lord Mayors-Stone Fort, where the first Warning-piece began. This being done, the Regiment of Horse, being all drawne up in a Body in the Abbey Church-yard, gave a volley with their Pistols, which being well and orderly performed, all the nine Regiments were appointed to fire, from Westminster Abbey to Essex house Gate: which service was principally performed by Colonell Underwoods blew Regiment, which were placed next to the Abbey Church-doore.

The said Signalls were given the second time, and after the firing of the Ordnance, round about the Line as before, the Horse and Foot fired in like manner. The like being done and performed the third time, the Horse and Foot marched away, and so the Solemnity ended.

The Hearse and the Effigies of the deceased Earl under it, with the Standard, Guidon, Banners, Great Banner, Bannerolls, and Hatchments, and eight pieces of Armour (which were borne) being placed about the Hearse, are all to stand and continue as they are set up in the Abbey Church of Westminster for a moneth after the Funerall.
